

A U.S. House panel agreed Thursday to exclude some auto dealers from oversight by a new consumer agency to protect consumers.

Captive finance companies, such as Ford Motor Credit, as well as banks that provide auto loans, such as GMAC, would be regulated by the agency.

Rep. John Campbell, R-Calif., argued that firms that act as a conduit between consumers and financing firms shouldn't face scrutiny because they aren't extending credit.